Researching profile

In-person system

Presentation:

This Master's Degree has been designed in order to enhance researching within Humanities, in general, and within the disciplines of Anthropology, Philology (Spanish, Classic, English and French), Philosophy, Geography, Art History, and History, in particular. Since a researching profile is more and more demanded in the globalized world we inhabit, this master's degree offers a qualified post-graduate education, focused on candidates who plan to cap their careers with a PhD, and on those who see the advantages of high education in such a competitive society as ours.

General and educational interest of this master's degree:

- a) It guarantees a wide and global education which enables the student to start any kind of research in a multidisciplinary context.
- b) It contributes to an interdisciplinary relationship between all the different disciplines of the Humanities sphere.
- c) It offers the theory and methodological tools to ensure the researching ability and capability of post-graduate students.
- d) It provides advance researching experiences in the field of Humanities.

The structure of this master's degree is in accordance to the new legal frame (enclosed by the European Higher Education Area –EHEA-).
